Beyond Meat Stock Is Having a Teflon Run. It's Not About the Products.

Beyond Meat stock is on an incredible tear. On Monday alone, the stock rose 12% after announcing a new ground-beef alternative. Still, is another product launch enough to justify the extreme valuation?

Facebook, Inc. (NASDAQ:FB)'s launch of its own branded digital currency called Libra could prove to be a "watershed moment," according to RBC Capital Markets.

Dan F [6:21 AM]

Libra addresses the need to create a digital currency and infrastructure to power the "internet of money," Mahaney wrote in a note. The platform will be built on a blockchain backed by a reserve of assets that gives the digital currency intrinsic value.

Kevdog [6:25 AM]

Thanks Eric.

Dan F [6:25 AM]

right Dave, so from what I understand the company that sells the second most ads in the world is going to be taking people's money to buy a fake currency so they can buy the things they advertise for.. it's a brilliant business scheme, they get cuts on three sides of the deal

Mose friend of Manoj [6:25 AM]

Zuck puts /GC behind it and I am in.
otherwise...

Dan F [6:26 AM]

but to call it a currency seems criminal. it's shady to me

Sri [6:26 AM]

Dan: i haven't read the FB whitepaper, but from my preliminary understanding, FB's digital currency is about making its 90 million small business users accept payments from 2.7 billion end-users who do not* have traditional bank accounts. basically, this expands small business reach to simplify commerce, making their overall platform more sticky.

aztecs99 [9:44 AM]
from larry today

If these levels hold, $SPX will gap open above 2900. $SPX has not been able to close above 2900 on this rally which has stalled out over the last week, but this might do it. A close above 2900 would be bullish and would signal another challenge of the all-time highs at 2940-2950. However, if $SPX fails here above 2900 again today— as it did on June 10th and 11th— that should give impetus to the bears. So this will be an important day, it seems. Equity-only put-call ratios remain on buy signals, as does the Total put-call ratio. Market breadth was lackluster again yesterday, so the “stocks only” breadth oscillator remains on a sell signal, while the NYSE-based one remains on a buy signal. Breadth will certainly be positive on today’s opening, and if it holds throughout the day, the “stocks only” oscillator will likely cancel out its sell signal. Volatility indices are indicated modestly lower on today’s expected higher opening. $VIX is trading down 30 cents right now. $VIX at these levels, near 15, is not going to interfere with stocks, but it is interesting to note that $VIX has normally been much lower than this with $SPX approaching all-time highs (over the past few years, at least). I don’t think that’s a major indicator for the market, but it does mean perhaps that the overconfidence we usually see near $SPX all-time highs might not be there so much this time. In summary, our indicators mostly remain bullish and therefore so do we. But a failure at the 2900 level again today should finally give the bears some conviction

We've rallied today on unexpected news headlines....great....in advance of the FOMC meeting and presser....I'd be delighted but surprised if we rallied hard tomorrow and didn't experience a "sell on the news." The good news is we don't know what the future holds and we'll all have to wait and see how things play out....

LYFT is going to have flying cars, can't wait

Michael R [1:16 PM]

ok goodnight all

aztecs99 [1:17 PM]

i like lyft chart, but uber better

I know we don't pay attention to after hours Bob but I peeked out of a tiny corner of my eye and ADBE up $8

Sri [1:28 PM]

ADBE looks good, Nicolette -- you may want to hear today's earnings call. if today's after-hours action holds tomorrow morning, you should be ok; as Bob says, though, we need to see how it does during the market... (edited)

It's fine to look

It's fine to watch

It's fine to use it to cover an option play/protect a gain

It's not fine to set any expectations for the next day based on AH

Nicolette [1:32 PM]

Yes, thank you for reminding me. Especially tomorrow!

SS [1:32 PM]

General rules of them

It can be great entertainment with popcorn and a conference call

Sri [1:32 PM]

as a striking example, last week TSLA held their shareholders meeting after-hours, and the stock rocketed higher. the next morning, it opened +12 at 222, and sold off to 210 during the day! and the following days, it grinded higher to 224... (edited)

Nicolette [1:33 PM]

Or AVGO when I tried to catch a falling knife

SS [1:33 PM]

There's tons of examples

Sri [1:33 PM]

yes, same...

SS [1:33 PM]

Remember feb 2 last year

Aapl was up nicely after hours

Next am the mkt and aapl was blasted

Were *

So many examples... which is why we have the above

by far the call is the most important part of the earnings report..The problem we are in as small traders is not knowing the expectations of the big boys..Thats why price action is the only way we can know (edited)
